1.0 What is self-harm?

Self-harm is a wide definition that includes eating disorders, self-injury, risk-taking behaviour and drug / alcohol misuse. This policy focuses on the self-injury aspect of self-harm.

Self-harm is a coping mechanism. An individual harms their physical self to deal with emotional pain, or to break feelings of numbness by arousing sensation. Self-harm is any deliberate, non-suicidal behaviour that inflicts physical harm on the body and is aimed at relieving emotional distress. Physical pain is often easier to deal with than emotional pain, because it causes ‘real’ feelings. Injuries can prove to an individual that their emotional pain is real and valid. Self-harming behaviour may calm or awaken a person. Yet self-harm only provides temporary relief, it does not deal with the underlying issues. Self-harm can become a natural response to the stresses of day-to-day life and can escalate in frequency and severity.

Self-harm can include but is not limited to, cutting, burning, banging, bruising and scratching. Self-harm is often habitual, chronic and repetitive; it tends to affect people for months and sometimes years.

People who self-harm usually make a great effort to hide their injuries and scars, and are often uncomfortable about discussing their emotional inner or physical outer pain. It can be difficult for young people to seek help from the NHS or from those in positions of authority, perhaps due to the stigma associated with seeking help for mental health issues. Self injury is usually private and personal, and it is often hidden from family and friends. People who do show their scars may do so as a reaction to the incredible secrecy of their emotions and feelings which they are unable to share, and one should not assume that they are attention seeking, although attention may well be needed.

Over the past 40 years, there has been a large increase in the number of young people who deliberately harm themselves. The Mental Health Foundation/Camelot Foundation (2006) suggests there are “probably 2 young people in every secondary school classroom who have self-harmed at some time” (The truth about self-harm. London: MHF/CP)

One in twelve children and young people are said to self-harm, and over the last ten years inpatient admissions for young people who have self harmed have increased by 68%. Among females under 25, there has been a 77% increase in the last ten years (SCIE, 2005; NICE)

Four times as many girls as boys self harm up to the age of 16, although this ratio reduces to twice as many among 18-19 year olds (SCIE, 2005; HSCIC, 2013)

Self-harm usually begins between 13 and 18 years of age and while frequently mild and transient, can, in some cases persist for up to 10 years (McAllister et al, 2010). Lifetime rates are reported of up to 33% among secondary school students self-harming, with approximately 10% of those engaging in relatively severe self-harm (McAllister et al, 2010)

Self-harm is not confined to children of secondary school age. Though it may manifest in different forms of behaviour, children at Primary Schools may also self-harm.

Accurate assessment, early detection and early intervention are essential to the successful treatment of self harm (Sharpio, 2008)
2.0 Self harming behaviours?

Factors that motivate people to self-harm include a desire to escape an unbearable situation or intolerable emotional pain, to reduce tension, to express hostility, to induce guilt or to increase caring from others.

Even if the intent to die is not high, self harming may express a powerful sense of despair and needs to be taken seriously. Moreover, some people who do not intend to kill themselves may do so because they do not realise the seriousness of the method they have chosen or because they do not get help in time.

Examples of Self-harming behaviour

• Cutting

• Taking an overdose of tablets

• Swallowing hazardous materials or substances

• Burning, either physically or chemically

• Over/under medicating, e.g. misuse of insulin

• Punching/hitting/bruising

• Hair-pulling/skin-picking/head-banging

• Episodes of alcohol/drug abuse or over/ under eating at times may be deliberate acts of self-harm.

• Risky sexual behaviour
3.0 What causes self-harm?

The following risk factors, particularly in combination, may make a young person vulnerable to self-harm, although are not limited to:

Individual factors:
- Depression/anxiety
- Poor communication skills
- Low self-esteem
- Poor problem-solving skills
- Hopelessness
- Impulsivity
- Substance misuse
- Bereavement
- Perfectionism
- Exam pressure

Family factors
- Unreasonable expectations
- Neglect or abuse (physical, sexual or emotional)
- Child being Looked After
- Poor parental relationships and arguments
- Parental separation and / or loss
- Depression, deliberate self-harm or suicide in the family.

Social Factors:
- Difficulty in making relationships/loneliness
- Persistent bullying or peer rejection
- Easy access to drugs, medication or other methods of self-harm.
- Copied self-harm behaviour (contagion effect)
- Difficult times of year e.g. anniversaries
- Criminal behaviour
- Accessing or difficulties within school
4.0 Warning signs

There may be a change in the behaviour of the young person that is associated with self-harm or other serious emotional difficulties, these may not be visible. Signs to be aware of may include:

- Changes in eating/sleeping habits
- Increased isolation from friends/family
- Changes in activity and mood, e.g. more aggressive than usual or more withdrawn
- Lowering of academic grades
- Talking about self-harming or suicide
- Frequent injuries (i.e., cuts, bruises, burns) with suspicious explanations.
- Wearing trousers and long sleeves in warm weather (to cover injuries).
- Wearing bangles, bracelets and wristbands (to cover injuries).
- Low self-esteem or an increase in negative self-talk.
- Difficulty handling emotions or easily overwhelmed.
- Extremely sensitive to rejection.
- Self-defeating comments and attitude.
- Extreme emotional ups and downs (due to the cycle of self-injury).
- Difficulty functioning at school, work or home.
- Relationship problems.
- Avoiding sports or other activities that would require showing more of one’s body.
- The presence of behaviours that often accompany self-injury: eating disorders, drugs/alcohol misuse, excessive risk-taking.
- Discovery of tools used for self-injury (broken disposable razors, lighters, un-bent paper clips).
- Bloodied wads of tissue or toilet paper, blood on clothing.
- First aid supplies being used quickly.
- Rubbing of arms, especially wrist, through sleeves (cuts often itch while they are healing).
- Withdrawing from activities once enjoyed.
- Increased time alone.
- Increased time with peers who self-injure.
5.0 What keeps the self-harm cycle going?

Once self-harm, particularly cutting, is established, it may be difficult to stop. Self-harm can have a number of functions for the student and it becomes a way of coping, for example:

- Reduction in tension (safety valve)
- Distraction from problems
- Form of escape
- Outlet for anger and rage
- Opportunity to feel real
- Way of punishing self
- Way of taking control
- To not feel numb
- To relieve emotional pain through physical pain
- Care-eliciting behaviour
- Means of getting identity with a peer group
- Non-verbal communication (e.g. of abusive situation)
- Suicidal act.

When a person inflicts pain upon him or herself, the body responds by producing endorphins, a natural pain-reliever that gives temporary relief or a feeling of peace. The addictive nature of this feeling can make the stopping of self-harm difficult.

Young people who self-harm still feel pain, but some say the physical pain is easier to stand than the emotional/mental pain that led to the self-harm initially.
6.0 How to respond

6.1 Immediate response to self-harm

When a young person presents themselves with concerns about self-harm or when we are asked to look into a concern about a child our immediate response needs to be calm and measured. The professional should indicate they feel confident they can be supportive (no matter how anxious they may feel) as his will gain not only the child/young person’s confidence.

Initially acknowledge the courage it has taken for the child/young person to seek help and acknowledge the self-harm. At this point it is important to communicate your acceptance of the situation and let them know you care but also to let them know the limits of your confidentiality, explain the reason why the information needs to be shared in order to keep them safe.

6.2 Required responses

If you find a young person who has self-harmed, try to keep calm, give reassurance and follow the first-aid guidelines. In the case of an over-dose of tablets, however small, advice must be obtained from a medical practitioner (accident and emergency department or GP).

When considering what action and support the young person needs, continue to maintain their trust and involve them in decisions.

Follow the policy of informing the designated person for child protection within your agency.

Parents will be contacted by the worker to whom the disclosure is made or in consultation with the designated lead.

Discuss your concerns with the young person’s parents, unless to do so would place the young person at further risk (see Child Protection Procedures and/or school safeguarding policies and procedures). If parents/carers are not contacted the reason must be documented and consultation with an Early Help Advisor is available.

Help the carers/parents to understand the self-harm so they can be supportive of the young person. Information for parents is available on pages 22 and 23 of these Guidelines.

Working with a young person who is self-harming can be distressing. Seek support from colleagues and the designated person for child protection in your agency.

You will need to complete the self-harm reporting form for each disclosure (page 14). Depending on the nature and severity of the self-harm you will also need to choose appropriate and proportionate responses from the list below: (also see care pathway on page 19)

- Continue to monitor the self-harm and discuss with someone who will be able to build a relationship with the young person and provide advice, for example through school pastoral systems.
- Provide the young person with information and advice sheet (page 20 and 21) continue to consider whether further assessment and support may be needed.
- If you are concerned about a young person complete an EHAF including the risk assessment to provide full details of needs and concerns.
- Consult with your school nurse, the child’s GP or with a Primary Mental Health Practitioner. In addition to the risk assessment.
• Discuss with the young person, their parents, year head and any other agencies your plans. Identify strengths, skills and risk factors and make a plan to address any vulnerability. If you cannot identify the necessary agency send EHAF to Early Help Panel.

• If you identify child protection concerns, follow school/ agencies procedures around how to make a referral. Document any reported concerns and record who you spoke to, the time, date and any advice they have given you to follow.

6.3 Confidentiality

Confidentiality is a key concern for young people, and they need to know that it may not be possible for you to offer this. If you consider that a young person is at serious risk of harming him or herself or others, then information needs to be shared. It is important not to make promises of confidentiality that you cannot keep, even though the young person may put pressure on you to do so.

If this is explained at the outset of any meeting, then the young person can make an informed decision as to how much information he or she wishes to divulge.

Make sure that as part of your conversation you work out together who are the best people to tell. Discuss with the young person the importance of letting his or her parents know, unless telling them would put the young person at higher risk. Discuss any fears he or she may have about this. Work through together what words you will use to explain to parents/ carers so that there are no surprises.
7.0 How to help

- Arrange a mutually convenient time and place to meet
- At the start of the meeting, set a time limit.
- Make sure the young person understands the limits of your confidentiality.

7.1 Conversations with the young person

- When you recognise signs of distress, try to find ways of talking with the young person about how he or she is feeling.
- What is important for many young people is having someone to talk to who listens properly and does not judge.
- Resist the temptation to tell them not to do it again, or make a promise you that they won’t do it again.
- Take a non-judgemental attitude towards the young person. Try to reassure the person that you understand that the self-harm is helping him or her to cope at the moment and you want to help.

It is important that all attempts of suicide or deliberate self-harm are taken seriously and that the young person listened to carefully. All mention of suicidal thoughts should be noted and reported appropriately following the schools or agencies safeguarding policy and procedures.

Understanding the individual’s experience

The only way to understand a child/young persons’ experience is talk to them about what is happening for them. Below are some questions/ideas that may be useful in developing that conversation.

Simple things you can say:

- ‘I’ve noticed that you seem bothered/worried/preoccupied/troubled. Is there a problem?’
- ‘I’ve noticed that you have been hurting yourself and I am concerned that you are troubled by something at present’
- ‘We know that when young people are bothered/troubled by things, they cope in different ways and self injury is one of these ways. Is this something you have tried or thought about?
- ‘Young people who do self-harm may need support from someone who understands problems in relation to self injury. Unfortunately I don’t have the skills to help, but I would like to help by asking (Name of counsellor/pastoral support/agency) to see you. Would you agree to this?’

Questions you may find helpful to add more detail to your assessment of need:

- What was happening when you first began to feel like injuring yourself?
- What seems to be the trigger feeling now?
- Are you always at a certain place or with a particular person?
- Do you have any frightening memories or thoughts?
• Is there anything else that makes you want to hurt yourself?
• What did you do? What form of self-harm is being used?
• Was it planned or impulsive?
• Were drugs or alcohol involved?
• Where and how did you learn to self-harm?
• Do you know anyone else who self-harms?
• Does anyone know you self-harm? What have they said/ done?
• When you manage to cope without self-harming what alternatives find work for you?

If they indicate the thought they wish to die or any expressions of suicidal ideation are shared please refer to the suicidal toolkit and care pathway.

8.0 Strategies to help

8.1 Coping strategies

Replacing the cutting or other self harm with other safer activities can be a positive way of coping with the tension. What works depends on the reasons behind the self-harm. Activities that involve the emotions intensively can be helpful. Examples of alternative ways of coping include:

• Using a creative outlet e.g. writing poetry & songs, drawing and talking about feelings

• Writing a letter expressing feelings, this need not be sent

• Contacting a friend or family member

• Ringing a helpline

• Going into a field and screaming

• Hitting a pillow or soft object

• Listening to loud music or singing

• Going for a walk/run or other forms of physical exercise

• Getting out of the house and going to a public place, e.g. a cinema

• Reading a book

• Keeping a diary

• Using stress-management techniques, such as relaxation

• Having a bath

• Looking after an animal
For some young people, self-harm expresses the strong desire to escape from conflict or unhappiness.

In the longer term, the young person may need to develop ways of understanding and dealing with the underlying emotions and beliefs. Family support is likely to be an important part of this.

It may also help if the young person joins a group activity such as a youth club, a keep-fit class or a school-based club that will provide opportunities for the person to develop friendships and feel better about him or herself. Learning problem solving and stress-management techniques, ways to keep safe and how to relax may also be useful. Increasing coping strategies and developing social skills will also assist. Regular counselling/therapy may be helpful so too may arts-based therapeutic interventions which offer the young person the opportunity to explore their thoughts, feelings and needs in a safe and non-judgemental environment.

Students may present with injuries to first-aid or reception staff. It is important that these frontline staff are aware that an injury may be self-inflicted and that they are aware of these guidelines and able to pass on any concerns.

- It may be helpful to explore with the young person what led to the self-harm – the feelings, thoughts and behaviours involved. This can help the young person make sense of the self-harm and develop alternative ways of coping.
- Encourage the young person to talk about what has led him or her to self-harm.
- Remember that listening is a vital part of this process.
- Support the young person in beginning to take the steps necessary to keep him or her safe and to reduce the self-injury (if he or she wishes to) for example:
  - If a young person lacks resilience, consider ways to help the young person build their self-esteem. Help the young person to find his or her own ways of managing the problem e.g. talking, writing, drawing or using safer alternatives, if the person dislikes him or herself, begin working on what he or she does like, if life at home is impossible, begin working on how to talk to parents/carers.
  - Help the young person to identify his or her own support network.
  - Offer information about support agencies – see the leaflets appended. Remember that some Internet sites may contain inappropriate information.

8.2 Further considerations

- Record any meetings with the young person. Include an agreed action plan, including dates, times and any concerns you have, and document who else has been informed of any information.
- It is important to encourage young people to let you know if one of their group is in trouble, upset or shows signs of harming. Friends can worry about betraying confidences, so they need to know that self-harm can be dangerous to life and that by seeking help and advice for a friend they are taking a responsible action.
- Be aware that the peer group of a young person who self-harms may value the opportunity to talk to an adult, individually. If you have a number of young people who self-harm in your school, you may consider consulting your Primary Mental Health Worker and Educational Psychologist.
Harm Minimisation

Keeping wounds clean is essential; this may be the first step to recovery. This may be difficult but patience and care can be influential in promoting health and recovery and may be enough to help the young person feel back in control accepted and less isolated.

Ways to encourage this:

- Washing implements used to cut
- avoiding alcohol if it’s likely to lead to self-injury
- taking better care of injuries, keeping wounds clean to prevent infection

Response of supportive members of staff

For those who are supporting young people who self harm, it is important to be clear with each individual how often and for how long you are going to see them, i.e. the boundaries need to be clear. It can be easy to get caught up in providing too much help, because of one’s own anxiety. However, the young person needs to learn to take responsibility for his or her self-harm.

If you find that the self-harm upsets you, it may be helpful to be honest with the young person. However, be clear that you can deal with your own feelings and try to avoid the young person feeling blamed. The young person probably already feels low in mood and has a poor self-image; your anger or upset may add to his or her negative feelings. However, your feelings matter too. You will need the support of your colleagues and management if you are to listen effectively to young people’s difficulties.

Issues regarding contagion

When a young person is self-harming, it is important to be vigilant in case close contacts of the individual are also self-harming. Occasionally, schools discover that a number of students in the same peer group are harming themselves. Self-harm can become an acceptable way of dealing with stress within a peer group and may increase peer identity. This can cause considerable anxiety, both in school staff and in other young people.

Each individual may have different reasons for self harming and should be given the opportunity for one-to-one support. In general, it is not advisable to offer regular group support for young people who self-harm. Be aware that young people may seek support through the internet where the advice they are offered may be counter-productive.

Support/training aspects for staff

Staff members giving support to young people who self-harm may experience all sorts of reactions to this behaviour in young people, such as anger, helplessness and rejection. Staff will need to have an opportunity to talk this through with work colleagues or senior management.

Staff members with this role may find it helpful to attend training, to access resources that may be available and liaise with other professionals – such as the CAMHS Primary Mental Health Workers or school nurses.

General aspects of prevention of self-harm

An important part of prevention of self-harm is having a supportive environment in the school that is focused on building self-esteem and encouraging healthy peer relationships. An effective anti-bullying policy and a means of identifying and supporting young people with emotional difficulties is an important aspect of this.

SSCB Priorities

This child/young person and family may be subject to:

- Domestic Abuse
- Mental ill Health
- Neglect
- Substance Misuse
- Other

(details: SELF HARM)
Asking yourself these questions may help you to make the decision about any action you need to take: it may be advice given to the family, signposting, a single agency referral, a multi-agency referral or a child protection referral.

Before making a referral ask yourself
1. What is getting in the way of this child’s wellbeing?
2. Do I have all the information I need to help this child?
3. What can I do now to help this child?
4. What can my agency do to help this child?
5. What additional help, if any, may be needed from other agencies and why?

When considering a referral to another agency the following list may assist you in organising your information. Please note that this list is not exhaustive, and should not be used as a checklist:

- What are your concerns?
- What evidence do you have to support your concerns? Please be specific.
- How/why have you concluded that a referral is necessary at this time?
- What is the context of your concern? Was there a specific trigger or event?
- What is the presenting need?
- How urgent is your referral?
- How have you tried to resolve these issues within your own work with the child or young person and their family (if relevant)?
- What will your continued input with the child or young person and their family be, if any?
- What do you want the receiving agency to do? Please be as specific as you can be.

Is the child at risk?
The Children Act 1989 introduced Significant Harm as the threshold that justifies compulsory intervention in family life in the best interests of children. Harm is defined as the ill treatment or impairment of health and development.

There are no absolute criteria on which to rely when judging what constitutes significant harm. Sometimes a single violent episode may constitute significant harm but more often it is an accumulation of significant events, both acute and longstanding, which interrupt damage or change the child’s development. It may be

- the child is at risk of serious harm from others or themselves and requires skilled risk assessment and protection;
- the child is likely to put others at risk or harm, distress or loss and a response needs to take account of the individual’s interests and wellbeing of others;
- the child’s circumstances, including their health, finances, living conditions or social situation, are likely to cause them or others serious harm, social exclusion or reduction of life chances;
- the situation requires assessment of, and intervention, in unpredictable emotional, psychological, intra-family or social factors and responses;
- the circumstances are such that there are significant risks in both intervening and not intervening, when a fine judgement is required.

10.1 My safety net

There are different types of people in our lives. Try to identify some people in each of the groups below that you would feel most comfortable talking to:

- Family and close friends
- Friends and people you see every day
- Help lines and professional people you could go to for help.

Also, write into the space below the safety net the things that you can do yourself to cope with difficult feelings and keep yourself safe.

Care Pathway – Self-harming risk

Initial concerns
- Information from friends
- Disclosure of self harm
- Direct observation

Use the self-harm policy guidance and follow Care Pathway

No evidence of self-harm thoughts or behaviour
- No Care Pathway actions
- Consider Early Help Assessment Framework if concerned that young person has additional needs

Consent
- Young people’s and parent/carers consent should be obtained for screening and assessment
- Consent is overridden if the young person (or a third party) is at risk of significant harm

Concerning response to Early Intervention questions and policy guidance
- Complete Risk Assessment (with consent)
- Explain limits of confidentiality
- Discuss with colleagues: Designated Lead, school nurse, Primary Mental Health Practitioner

Low risk
- No Care Pathway referral required
- Ensure ongoing support for young person, parent/carer and professionals at Tier 1
- Monitor, record and reassess if concerns persist, complete Early Help discussion record

If additional needs identified
- Complete Early Help Assessment Framework
- Refer on if in need

Medium or High Risk
- Send a copy of the Risk Assessment along with any additional information to the address as shown
- Inform support network
- Co-ordination of support plan. May include: School nurse, Primary Mental Health Practitioner, Targeted Youth Support, school support staff, counsellor, parent/carer, voluntary sector agencies
- Contact Compass on 0345 678 9021 for consultation/advice if required.

- (Tier 2 direct work needs to link to the threshold document)

- Emergency Action
  - If self harm actions cause significant injury (e.g. deep cutting or an overdose) call emergency services
  - Contact the Emergency Duty Team if out of hours and copy assessments to them if agreed (0345 678 9040)
  - If non-urgent but serious self-harm seek medical attention (e.g. school first aid or GP)

Where can I find support?

In the longer term it is important that the young person learns to understand and deal with the causes of stress that they feel. The support of someone who understands and will listen can be very helpful in coping with difficult feelings.

What is self-harm?

Self-harm is where someone does something to deliberately hurt themselves. This could be a minor injury such as hair pulling, repeated scab picking, head banging or a more serious, sometimes even life threatening injury which may include deep cutting parts of the body, burning, hitting, swallowing harmful substances or an overdose of medication.

If you cause yourself significant harm or injury tell someone and seek immediate help.

Why do young people self-harm?

Self-harm is often a way of trying to cope with painful and confusing feelings.

What triggers it?

You may self-harm once or twice at a particular difficult time in your life, or self-harm can become an ongoing way of coping with current or past problems and may occur regularly, on a monthly, weekly or daily basis. The trigger could be a reminder of the past, a stressful event, or something unexpected that causes a shake-up. But sometimes, ordinary life can be so difficult that some may feel self-harm is the only way to cope with it.

What triggers it?

Replacing the self-harm with other, safer, coping strategies can be a positive and more helpful way of dealing with difficult things in your life. Helpful strategies can include:

- finding someone to talk to about your feelings, such as a friend or family member
- talking to someone on the phone, e.g. you might want to ring a helpline
- writing and drawing about your feelings, because sometimes it can be hard to talk about feelings
- scribbling on and/or ripping up paper
- lying on your back and thinking about your feelings
- finding someone to talk to about your feelings, such as a friend or family member
- using a lavender bag
- finding a diary, keeping a diary, reading, o...

Where can I find support?
What is self-harm?

This could be a minor injury such as hair pulling, repeated scab picking, head banging or a more serious, sometimes even life threatening injury which may include deep cutting parts of the body, burning, hitting, swallowing harmful substances or an overdose of medication. If you are aware of one of these more serious injuries seek medical advice immediately.

How common is self-harm?

A large recent study found that among 15 to 16 year olds, approximately 7 per cent had self-harmed in the previous year. (Hawton et al. 2002)

How might a parent/carer feel of a child or young person who has self-harmed?

As a parent/carer, you may feel disbelief as well as angry, shocked, guilty and upset. These reactions are normal, but what the person you care about really needs is support from you. The person needs you to stay calm and to listen to them cope with very difficult feelings that build up and cannot be expressed. The person needs to find a less harmful way of coping, please refer to the suggested list of helpful strategies in the young persons leaflet.

Why do young people harm themselves?

All sorts of upsetting events can trigger self-harm, such as:

- arguments with family
- break-up of a relationship
- failure in exams
- bullying at school
- be a way of communicating to people that they need some support: When they feel unable to use words or any other way to do so
- be a way of proving to themselves that they are not invisible
- as a way of fitting in with a group of friends and needing to be accepted
- provide them with a feeling of control: Young people might feel that self-harm is one way they can have a sense of control over their life, feelings, or body, especially if they feel as if other things in their life are out of control.

Sometimes several stresses occur over a short period of time and one more incident is the final straw.

Children and young people who have emotional or behavioural problems or low self-esteem can be particularly at risk from self-harm. Suffering a bereavement or serious rejection can also increase the risk. Sometimes, young people try to escape their problems by taking drugs or alcohol. This only makes the situation worse. For some people, self-harm is a desperate attempt to show others that something is wrong in their lives.

Deliberate self-harm can bring an immediate sense of relief but it is only a temporary solution. It can also cause permanent damage to the body.

Is it just attention-seeking?

There are many other factors that lead people to self-harm, including a desire to escape, to reduce tension, to express hostility, to make someone feel guilty or to increase caring from others. Some people who self-harm may have a desire to kill themselves. The majority of young people do not intend to take their own life but self-harming behaviour is a way of expressing a strong sense of despair and needs to be taken seriously, so they do require your support and attention.

What can we do to help

Help the person find different ways of coping by:

- Keeping an open mind.
- Making the time to listen, but do not pressurise them to talk.
- Writing down feelings may be easier for them than talking.
- Allowing them to talk about how they feel is probably the most important thing you can do for them. Just feeling that someone is listening and that they are being heard can really help. Good listening is a skill. Always let the person finish what they are saying and while they are talking, try not to be thinking of the next thing you are going to say.

Harm minimisation

It is essential that wounds are kept clean, and perhaps you could encourage this by providing the individual with a first aid kit or making an agreement with them that they look after themselves.

This might be the first step to recovery but must be mutually agreed and not imposed. We know this may feel very difficult for you, but this method of patience and care may be very influential in promoting health and recovery, and may be enough to help the person feel back in control, accepted and less isolated.

Information may need to be shared in order to keep the young person safe, this could be with the school or relevant support services.

What is self-harm?
Self-harm is where someone does something to deliberately hurt themselves. This could be a minor injury such as hair pulling, repeated scab picking, head banging or a more serious, sometimes even life threatening injury which may include deep cutting parts of the body, burning, hitting, swallowing harmful substances or an overdose of medication.

If your friend causes significant harm or injury to themselves tell someone and seek medical advice immediately.

Why do young people self-harm?
Self-harm is often a way of trying to cope with painful and confusing feelings. Difficult things that people who self-harm talk about include:

- feeling sad, worried or angry
- not feeling very good or confident about themselves
- being hurt by others: physically, sexually or emotionally
- feeling under a lot of pressure at school or at home
- be a way of fitting in with a group of friends and needing to be accepted
- losing someone close, such as someone dying or leaving.

When difficult or stressful things happen in a person’s life, it can trigger self-harm. Upsetting events that might lead to self-harm include:

- arguments with family or friends
- break-up of a relationship
- failing, or thinking you are going to fail, exams
- being bullied.

Often, these things can build up until the young person feels he or she cannot cope anymore. Self-harm can be a way of trying to deal with or escaping from these difficult feelings. It can also be a way of the person showing other people that something is wrong in his or her life.

What triggers it?
The person may self-harm themselves once or twice at a particular difficult time in their life, and never do so again. But self-harming can become an ongoing way of coping with current problems and may occur regularly, on a monthly, weekly, or daily basis. Deliberate self-harm can bring an immediate sense of relief but it is only a temporary solution. It can also cause permanent damage to the body.

What can I do, to help me and my friend?
You can really help by just being there, listening and giving support:

- Be open and honest. If you are worried about your friends safety you should tell an adult. Let your friend know that you are going to do this and you are doing it because you care about him or her.
- Encourage your friend to get help. You can go with your friend or tell someone that he or she wants to know about it.
- Get information from telephone helplines, websites, a library, etc. This can help you understand what your friend is experiencing.
- Allowing them to talk about how they feel is probably the most important thing you can do for them. Just feeling that someone is listening and that they are being heard can really help. Good listening is a skill. Always let the person finish what they are saying and, while they are talking, try not to be thinking of the next thing you are going to say.

Information may need to be shared in order to keep your friend safe.

Assessing the level of risk
Supporting guidance tools for assessing self-harm and risk management

Section 1 Protective factors and risk factors

This framework is a guide for practitioners and managers in every school and agency that works with, or is involved with children, young people and their families. Its aim is to assist practitioners and managers in assessing and identifying a child’s level of need.

The aim is that as far as possible children’s needs should be met within universal provision, but that flexible support should be introduced to meet additional needs with the consent of the child and parents, at the earliest possible stage, thus helping to achieve good outcomes and to prevent an increase in difficulties. Relevant factors should be included in the full assessment.
